The celebration is being organized by the Central Hollywood Coalition, the non-profit board that manages the Sunset & Vine Business Improvement District (BID), to highlight the business community around the famed Sunset & Vine intersection, especially the restaurants. Millennium Hollywood is the Platinum Sponsor of the event.

“We’re excited to once again bring together the entertainment and culinary communities for a night under the stars,” planning committee member Charles Eberly, The Eberly Company, said. “We’ve received a great amount of interest from local restaurants, and we’re delighted that The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has agreed to screen a film for the event.”

To showcase local talent and emphasize the presence the film industry has had on the neighborhood, the BID is also sponsoring a short film contest, titled “Show Me Sunset & Dine.” Aspiring filmmakers of all ages are invited to create a short film depicting what Sunset & Vine means to them. Selected films will be screened at the event, and two $500 grand prizes will be awarded for both the selected adult age and youth filmmakers.

“In keeping with tradition, we’re asking the community to get involved and showcase their talents,” planning committee member Elizabeth McDonald, The Los Angeles Film School, said. “Last year, we had high school students create pole banner designs which were showcased at the event. This year, since we’re able to screen a movie, we decided we’d have people make short films so we could screen them for all our attendees.”

Academy Hollywood is located at 6322 DeLongpre Ave. in Hollywood. Tickets are on sale now at www.sunsetanddine.org. The site includes up-to-date information including participating restaurants and vendors.
